Even banks with paint wear can be valuable, and the paint should never be touched up on these cast iron pieces. Collectors value original condition more than anything when it comes to these pieces, just as with Hubley toys and cast iron door stops. Banks should be in good working order to bring high values as well.

The problem with toys like this retaining their value is, when most kids get toys, they open them up and play with them, which depreciates their value big time. But that is what kids do! This is the first of two examples of toys on the list I actually own but are now worth next to nothing because I actually used them and had fun with them. FML.
