THREE CAN KEEP A SECRET ..., as book 6 in the Commando Chronicles mystery crime/urban thriller series, picks up where book 5, DEARTH OF A NATION, left off. In DEARTH, we watched Consulting Detective Jeff Knight and his dauntless band of talented young friends beat the Federal investigative agencies to the punch by solving the Crime of the Millennium, the bizarre barbaric assassination of presidential candidate Szandor Barnisson, following which high school junior/aspiring writer Caitlyn Corcoran made hundreds of millions with an international best selling tell-all book about her involvement called I WAS THERE. Following that triumph, Caitlyn's young friend, the artist Marcia Foster, reaped many millions more by teaming up with a Cinematography Professor to turn the book into a movie. In book 6, THREE CAN KEEP A SECRET ..., we find Caitlyn and Marcia pooling their money and talents to found a movie company in their home town, and it's off to more high adventure as murder and intrigue rears its head in their midst, complicating things and calling again on the talents of PI Jeff Knight to step in and take charge. As always, it's a complex mystery and a complex, colorful cast of characters, but, again as always, fair play all the way, inviting the reader to pit his own wits against good guys and bad guys alike to solve the crime, or say rather crimes. All that, and make a movie too? Never a dull moment for the Commando crew!
