Documents the development of the Cambridge ESOL Certificates in English Language Skills (CELS), a suite of modular examinations first offered in 2002. As a context for how CELS was conceived, developed, constructed, validated and managed, the book traces the history of exams which have influenced CELS. The Royal Society of Arts (RSA), later UCLES (University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate) Communicative Use of English as a Foreign Language examinations (CUEFL) was one such influence, as were the Certificates in Communication Skills in English (CCSE), these exams being a development of the CUEFL. The University of Oxford Delegacy of Local Examinations (UODLE) examinations, taken over by UCLES in 1995, were a further influence on CELS. UODLE itself had worked in partnership with the Association of Recognised Language Schools (ARELS) Examinations Trust, the Oxford EFL reading and writing exams for many years offered in tandem with the ARELS Oral English exams.

In the context of outcomes-based school governance, statewide exit exams are often expected to have a positive effect on student achievements if schools and teachers use the performance feedback from the exams for school, instructional, and professional development. However, very little is known about whether the exams are used for development at all and how this is affected by factors in the exam system and organizational aspects of schools. In a comparison of Finland, Ireland, and the Netherlands, the study therefore investigates how different exam systems and their functions, the conditions at school level, and the use of the exams for school and classroom development are associated. The study uses expert interviews and a questionnaire survey with principals and teachers. The role statewide exit exams can play in education systems is analyzed from a governance perspective and a school development perspective and discussed with an international comparative view. Esther Dominique Klein, born in 1982, Dr. phil., is research assistant at the Faculty of Educational Sciences of the University of Duisburg-Essen. Her main research interests lie in the areas of school system and school development research and international comparative education.

Do you need help writing A level Politics essays?The best way to revise for your A level Politics exam is to practice writing essays and I have written this A level Politics revision guide to help you do exactly that.This is no ordinary A level Politics book! It has:*Over 150 practice A-level Politics exam questions for 2021. *Includes 25 source questions.*Links to online exemplar answers and resources.I have combed through the specifications, spoken to the Edexcel exam board, consulted the wise and come up with questions that I think cover most of the course. I tell my students, go into the exam expecting that you have already covered most of the paper. And I can report back, even the sceptics come out of their exams happy. For sure, you cannot predict the paper, neither can you second-guess the slightly twisted minds of the examiners when they throw out a tough question. But you can prepare. So there's no time to lose. If you do need to be reminded of content, go to www.alevelpolitics.com/courses to access the content for each topic together with videos and resources. If you need ideas, search for an essay on my site from which you can learn. If you need examples, access my A level Politics podcast. But don't make excuses. So, I wish you all the best as you begin your A level Politics revision and drop me an email to tell me how you are getting on.Jal Patel Head of Politics Editor of www.alevelpolitics.com
