Kurzel's Macbeth: Aesthetics of a War Drama | The Artifice

The film's colour palette moves increasingly towards a fiery, bloody red. The film makes the most of darkness, with occasional shots of bleak white mountains causing the viewer to flinch in surprise at the light. The climactic duel between Macduff (Sean Harris) and Macbeth takes place in a haze of red and floating ash.

Review: Justin Kurzel's Macbeth | Shakespeare Reloaded

Justin Kurzel's Macbeth is a bold and visually dynamic adaptation of the play, setting the doomed king's story in the historically apt 11th century and making full use of the dark but luminous palette of hues and light allowed by shooting in the Scottish Highlands.

Michael Fassbender in Justin Kurzel's Macbeth | The ...

With these tweaks in mind, we will see how Kurzel offers a much darker and more cynical view of Macbeth than most film-makers. The basic plot of Macbeth is fairly straight-forward, and is by far the shortest of Shakespeare's tragedies, coming in at nearly 1000 lines shorter than King Lear and Othello, and is barely half the length of Hamlet. The play begins with an off-stage battle between rebels and those loyal to the king, as three witches spin lyrical incantations about one of the ...

Macbeth (2015 film) - Wikipedia

That said, Kurzel has created a visually-striking hell that is all of Macbeth's own making. The criticisms made of Kurzel's Macbeth thus far seem to have to do with what parts of Shakespeare's source play are emphasized in this adaptation - sometime that partly reflects on Kurzel's direction, but perhaps more so the manner in which screenwriters Jacob Koskoff, Michael Lesslie, and Todd Louis approached the material.

vation. So, for example, if Macbeth becomes 'evil', then it seems reason-able to ask why. Justin Kurzel's visually impressive new film of the play opens with Macbeth and his wife at the burial of a dead child, presumably theirs. This speculation is not new but it is worth considering. We know that Lady Macbeth says she has 'given suck'
