The greatest shift in the attorney's role and responsibilities arises once mediation begins. During mediation, attorneys typically assist their clients in some of the following ways: They acknowledge the client's central role and, in particular, do not speak for the client; instead, attorneys offer advice, guidance and information.

From Advocate to Advisor: The Role of the Lawyer in Mediation

Bringing another party to court is expensive, time consuming and stressful. By using a mediator, both parties will be given a neutral ear and the benefit of a private, confidential means of coming to an agreement. Mediation can be helpful in nearly any situation, from private family matters to mega corporations.

Mediation is essentially a negotiation facilitated by a neutral third party. Unlike arbitration, which is a process of ADR somewhat similar to trial, mediation doesn't involve decision making by the neutral third party. ADR procedures can be initiated by the parties or may be compelled by legislation, the courts, or contractual terms.
