With regard to his claim that average Americans share his fear of Black violence, the Reasonable Racist can point to evidence such as a 1990 University of Chicago study which found that more than one out of two Americans endorses the proposition that Blacks tend to be "violence prone." 2 Moreover, numerous recent news stories chronicle the widespread exclusion of Blacks from shops and taxicabs by anxious storekeepers and cabdrivers, many of whom openly admit to making race-based ...

Chapter One - Negrophobia and Reasonable Racism
While the Reasonable Racist explicitly admits his prejudice and bases his claim for exoneraton on the prevalence of irrational racial bias, the Bayesian invokes the "objectivity" of numbers. The Bayesian's argument is simple: "As much as I regret it, I must act differently toward Blacks because it is logical to do so."
