The pilot in Southern Mail flies a mail plane from Toulouse through Spain and along the West Coast of Africa to Dakar before heading across the Atlantic to Buenos Aires. Antoine de Saint-Exupéry is more fixated on his pilot, Jacques Bernis, here than in Night Flight. There is as much about Bernis' adulterous relationship with his girlfriend Genevieve than there is on the flight.

Southern Mail by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry

Courrier sud, translated as Southern Mail and Southern Carrier, is the first novel by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry, published in 1929. Encouraged by the publication of his short story The Aviator, Saint-Exupéry followed up with this work based on his pioneering flights for the French airmail service. A structured novel, it has three sections, the shorter outer sections being set in the heat and daylight of the Sahara Desert, the long central section in France at night and in petting rain.
