Spring: A Haiku Story Illustrated by Malcah Zeldis. Greenwillow, 1996. "...a unique anthology that strings together 14 translations of the 17-syllable poems, one per page, to tell the story of a pastoral walk in early spring...The effect of this constant renewal, page after page, is in keeping not only with the creative energy of spring but with the ancestry of the haiku in linked-verse ...

Spring: A Haiku Story - George Shannon

Spring SW. na no hana: Rapeseed blossoms. Grow in expansive yellow patches. Spring SW. This poem has two SW, a construction which is usually considered redundant and avoided by haiku poets. Here, however, there is a good reason for this choice, since the second SW is actually absent, and this shows the time to be very early in the spring.

Spring Haiku - Natsume Soseki - Reajer

Spring is an anthology of 14 haiku, one per page, which are strung together to create a narrative that tells the story of a stroll that a boy and a girl take together through a village during the spring thaw. The event described by each poem is simple--a snail notices its shadow; a sleeping dog is tickled by the branches of a willow--but the overall effect is rich and entertaining.
